keepers to defeat high license. This has encouraged the opponents of the measure to renewed effort. The St. John men have been particularly active, and have stopped at nothing to insure the rejection of the $1,000 tax on the New York and Brooklyn saloons and to perpetuate the rule of run in those great cities. The Rev. Dr. Peter Funk, one of the leading Prohibitionist cranks, made the following isolish trade against the high tax on rum in New York the other night: to renewed effort. The St. John men have the other night:

sgainst the high tax on rum in New York the other night:

High Resease is objectionable because it lank restrictive, and into politice, too. [It is in politics now.] High Resease of reducing the number of ealons it aggravates the evils. [That is a lie.] The politicians are in the control of the saloons, and the saloons have now added houses of ill-fame and gambling hells to their pieces of business. Where under low license the siquor business where under low license it says "Give me your daughter also." [This is an abominable fraud on his listeners, as the practice was in greater vocus under low license. I ligh license if says "Give me your daughter also." [This is an abominable fraud on his listeners, as the practice was in greater vocus under low license.] High license in Chicago is a delusion and a fraud. I spent two nights visiting saloons there with a friend after the hour the law said they must be closed to find that out.

"It is not true that high license is not restrictive, as Dr. Peter Fank asserts, says the Chicago Tribune, for where it is properly enforced by officials in sympathy with the law, as in Joliet, in Illinois, where the number of zaloons has been reduced by $1,000 tax from 106 to forty, and where nearly all the doggeries have been wiped out and a general improvement in the liquor traffic secured. But even in Chicago, where the officials are antriondly to the law, it has undoubtedly kept down the liquor traffic secured. But even in Chicago, where the officials are unfriendly to the law, it has undoubtedly kept down the number of drinking places at least 1,000 and improved the character of the bulk of them. The evils of which Dr. Peter Funk complains in connection with Chicago saloons he must needs know are not the result of the tax on liquor, but of the lax enforcement of the city ordinances against houses of ill-lame and their habitues. It is surely not the fault of the $500 tax on liquor that the saloons are permitted by the Mayor to remain open after midnight, contravy to the city ordinances, or that they are connected with immoral places and gambling-houses. Those places exist contrary to the ordinances, and the lax where he therefore the conceilier.) Those places exist contrary to the ordinances and the laws by the convenience

The truth of the matier is, that the Prohibition cranks are at heart allies of the Democratic rum party in New York now, as they were in 1834, when, with the help of their decoy-duck candidate, St. John, they contributed to the election of Cleveland, who takes his bug-juice straight. They want to cover up their hypocriety by They want to cover up their hypocrisy by stale, musty, and bypocritical arguments.

PUNCH AND JUDY.

The Story of the Famous Pair-A Narrativ Irish Tomes.

The remantic story of Punch and Judy is, in its original form, as follows: Mr. Punch, a gentleman of great personal attraction, is married to Miss Judy, by whom he has a lovely daughter. To the whom he has a lovely daughter. To the baby no name is given in the piece, the infant being ton young to he christened. In a fit of horrid and demoniac jealousy Mr. Punch, like a gecond Zancq, strangled his beautiful off-gring. Just as he completed his dreadful purpose Mrs. Judy enters, witnesses (the brutal havoc, and exits screaming; she soon returns, however, with a bludgeon, and applies it to her husband's head, "which to the wood returns a wooden sound." Exapperated by jealousy and race, Mr. Punch seizes another bludgeon and lays her prostrate at his feet; then seizing, the murdered infant and expiring mother, he flings infant and expiring mother, he fling them both out of the window into the

The dead bodies having been found, The dead bodies having been found, police officers enter the dwelling of Mr. Punch, who flies for his life, mounts his steed, and the author, neglecting, like other great poels, the confiding unities of time and place, conveys his here into Spain, where, however, he is arrested by an officer of the terrible inquisition. After enduring the most cruel tortures with incredible fortitude, Mr. Punch, by means of a golden key (a beautiful and novel allegory), opens his prison door and eacapes. The conclusion of the affecting story is satirful, allegorical and poetical. The here is first overtaken by weariness and laziness in the shape of a black dog, whom he fights and conquers; disease, in and laziness in the shape of a black dog, whom he fights and conquers; disease, in the disguise of a physician, next arrests him, but Punch "sees through the thin pretense," and dismisses the doctor with a few derogatory kicks. Death at last visits the fugitive, but Panch lays about his skeleton carcass so lustily, and makes the bones of his antagonist rattle so musically, that "It is also untrue that high license brings the saloon question into politics. On the contrary, it keeps it out of politics. On the contrary, it keeps it out of politics. Since our High-License law was passed," continues the Tribune, "the saloon question has not influenced our Stato or city or county politics in the least. city or county politics in the least to return it at once, but to her for a dozen years before the High-License law was enacted the saloocs were that he would see her later. QUEER TRICKS OF SMUGGLERS.

Odd Dodges to Get Diamonds Across the Dead Line of Duty.

Joudier's Weekly.

One person not very long ago had a number of diamonds concealed under a porus plaster on his back. Information regarding him was cent from one of the cities on the ether side, but he succeeded in little of Blolling in olillelas and brought his diamonds into the city. He was closely watched, however, and he had no sooner divested himself of his plaster than the solilelas ponneed upon bim and seized his contraband wares. The marks on his body where the diamonds had reated were quite plain. The most popular methods now are to conceal were quite plain.
